ABOUT THE PROGRAM

The word noel (from Fr. nouvelle) first makes its appearance in songs of the early fifteenth century; a variation, equally popular, is noe (Lat. nova). And the English equivalent, of course, is nowell. There are several motets, like the setting by Busnois, which are sung entirely to the word noe or noel.

The 15th-century tune with the words ‘C’était à l’heure’ de minuit’ was used as well for an Easter text, the setting we recognize as the familiar hymn ‘O filii et filiae’ (‘O Sons and Daughters’). Mr. Renz has adorned this monophonic tune with improvised harmonization in three parts, a practice of the early Renaissance called fauxbourdon. It is a technique used mainly by the French, in which a melody is accompanied by a parallel part moving along at the lower sixth with an occasional octave, while a middle part is extemporized by singing in parallel fourths below the melody. Dufay’s setting (in alternation) of the plainchant hymn tune ‘Conditor alme siderum’ is a contemporaneous example of this technique.

The word carol (F. noel, Sp. villancico) is thought to be derived from the medieval French word carole – a round dance. This term is associated with early pagan dance-songs performed in celebration of the winter solstice, a ritual that was later merged with Christmas. It should be noted, however, that originally the carol was not exclusive to this holiday. The numerous examples in 15th-century sources show that the distinguishing characteristic of the carol was not its subject matter but the presence of a burden or refrain sung in alternation with a number of uniform stanzas called verses. In the 16th century the carol became more varied in form and style but more focused in subject matter, the emphasis being on Christmas.

English carols and Latin cantilenae of the mid-15th century are from four manuscripts: the Trinity Roll, the Seldon Manuscript, the Egerton Manuscript, and the Ritson Manuscript. These two- and three-part carols were probably performed by skilled Franciscan monk/musicians who wrote and sang them during their long struggle with paganism. These non-liturgical compositions may have been introduced in church, civic or courtly procession. The pagan carole, with its origin as a dance/song, probably explains its ecclesiastical association with physical movement in the form of processions. ‘Nowell: This is the salutation of the Angel Gabriel’ is set to a monophonic tune, likely one of a vast body of popular melodies now lost and akin to the Meistersingers’ art of a former generation. ‘Lullay: Als I lay’ survives as a monophonic tune as well.

Court records indicate that on Twelfth Night, 1488, “when at the Table in the Medell of the Hall sat the Deane and thoos of the kings Chapell, which incontynently after the furst Course sange a Carall.” Henry VIII’s Book did not belong to the King but was given that title to acknowledge the fact that it contains many of his own compositions. Thirty-three pieces in all bear the superscription: ‘the kynge h.viii.’ Moreover it is indisputably a document of court music in the early years of Henry VIII’s reign. The dating of this songbook to the years 1510-20 is supported by the fact that in this period fantastic sums of money were spent on court entertainments such as chivalric ‘disguisings’ and seasonal revels. “On Twelfth Night, ...the pageant with which the Christmas revelries concluded – a mountain which moved towards the king and opened, and out of which came Morris-dancers.”

‘Grene groweth the holly’ belongs perhaps to a Christmas revels. The setting of the words ‘Sweet Jesus is come to us’ is referred to as a contrafactum, having been written after the fact to the song with the more worldly words ‘And I were a maiden but twelve years of age.’

In the Pageant of the Shearmen and Tailors, the Coventry Carol was sung by the women of Bethlehem just before Herod's soldiers came on to slaughter their children. ‘Remember O thou man’ is one of many brief, homophonic songs and humorous catches published by John Playford for popular entertainment after the turn of the century. The poem is inspired by a Responsory in the service of Ash Wednesday “Memento homo quia pulvis es et in pulverem reverteris” (“Remember, O man, that dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return”). The tune is metrically cast as a galliard.

Standing at the threshold of the baroque, Michael Praetorius is best known for his comprehensive treatise ‘Syntagma musicum’. It includes a compendium of all known musical instruments of his time, each represented in a careful engraving and now a favorite resource for graphic illustrations. His substantial collection of instrumental dances entitled ‘Terpsichore’ is a staple for Renaissance bands. He also was a composer of complex polychoral works for voices and instruments in the style of his teacher Gabrieli. Yet his four-part harmonization of popular Christmas tunes display an ability to compose with simplicity and austere elegance.

‘E la don don’ and ‘Riu, riu chiu’ are fine examples of the Spanish counterpart to the English carol. Villancicos in form, they feature a repeated refrain for four voices before and after each monophonic verse. Like ‘Nowell: This is the salutation,’ the texts tell stories in the several monophonic verses. The rhythmic language is unmistakably Spanish, however, and is highly characterized by considerable, evocative syncopation.

Lute duets interspersed through the second half of the program are taken largely from Jane Pickeringe's Lute Book, one of the finest sources of the English lute repertory containing several settings as duets. Nothing is known of the life of its original owner: it is fortunate that her name is known, as the first section of the manuscript has been lost, narrowly missing the folio containing her signature and a date of 1616.
